

February 2026: GLOBAL MARKET INDEX PERFORMANCE

Global equity and bond markets delivered mixed results in February. The S&P 500 returned -0.8%, the MSCI ACWI IMI increased 1.6%, and developed non-U.S. equities (MSCI EAFE) increased 4.6%. In the U.S., value stocks outperformed growth, while large cap underperformed small cap. The Bloomberg Aggregate Bond Index returned 1.6% and U.S. high yield bonds returned 0.2% for the month. U.S. CPI fell from 2.7% through December to 2.4% as of January 2026.

Investor rotation out of large-cap technology stocks and into consumer defensive sectors, combined with the announcement of a new 15% global tariff, weighed on U.S. markets. At the same time, this shift supported gains in international markets as investors sought to diversify away from crowded U.S. tech positions. The European Central Bank held interest rates steady, reaffirming its commitment to guiding inflation sustainably toward its target. Gold prices surged after Producer Price Index (PPI) data rose 0.8%, well above the 0.3% consensus estimate, while oil prices increased amid heightened tensions with Iran. The U.S. dollar strengthened modestly, while U.S. Treasury yields declined.
